The school-agent, Mr. Anderson, did not see why he could not have his Sunday- peop school in the meeting-house, which was only a stone's-throw off, and told him so; the reverend gentlemen was excited by the refusal. Some people thought to make capital of it, and kept up a "nagging" on it, until the school-agent, or a friend for him, makes his statement, in reply. Let it be borne in mind, this was not a case where the school-house was remote from the church and therefore more convenient for a part of the Sunday-school scholars; in which case, the use of it would have been most gladly given. But the school-agent could see no reason in the request; nor was any offered, except, that the people of the district had contributed, some with laborers from any foreign country, and of the cost, to raise the building for a school-house, as they had contributed the money to raise the other building for a meeting-house. Is this a good example to cite, for the purpose of showing that Mr. Emerson ever offered any counsels, and if he did, that they were " ignored, disregarded, or opposed." Or, is it branded to be senously maintained, that in a case like this, public statements are to be made regarding any man, in public prints, and those statements, when passed by in silence, to be reiterated again and again, and he is not

An immediant of emigration planting described to the profit of rious freedmen, would start for the Pacific or the Pacific of the Pacific ry slight encouragement. Many will go without at encouragement, and the opening of the great citle Balleron will see the many adventurers to your orn, to useful in developing the resource, of the wallow Kingdom!

"Not only is our statement sustained, but the Gazarra correspondent asserts even more—'an immensa COLONY * * * of interiors freedomen sould start for the Pucific with very sight encouragement." This is the language of the Hawaiian Commissioner,

Now, if anybody thinks that they can get freedmen, from the Southern States of America, to emigrate from thence to this country, and thinks it desirable to do so, why, in the name of common sense, don't be make the attempt? It has already been said, by authority, in this paper, and is now repeated, that any one, who wishes to try it, can have all permission necessary, from the Board of Immigration, and all the facilities that can be granted. It has been before said, in reply, that no one would go about this business, on the statement of an anonymous to make any answer, because one of the parstatement of an anonymous writer, but is an authorized statement, that if anybody thinks any plan in this direction possible, and wishes to try it, by taking the trouble of going up to the Government House, he can have all the authority and permission that he requires. Surely this is not risking much, the walk up Fort Street. Again: There is no Commissioner of Immigration, from this Government, either in America or anywhere else, nor has there been any abroad since the return of Dr. Hil-

What is meant by "free immigration," and the slight encouragement of "paying their passages here?" Is it meant that some one should go abroad, and invite a parcel of people to come here, and pay their passage, and when they get here, they should not be required to work, or to pay the money back, but they may beg or steal, as they may elect, or take the first passage for California, ship aboard of a whaleship, or otherwise?

On what authority, anyone says, that the Legislature intended any such thing, by the appropriation, and in what country this is just what is done with laborers from any foreign country," no one can say-When did the public money of any country pay the passages of laborers to their own shores, without having that outlay repaid either in labor done for the public, or in cash, or its equivalent. Speaking of the immense knowledge which our friend says is possessed by the former slaves, in the United States, touching this country, it may be worth while to quote from a letter dated April 1st 1869, from the same gentleman who wrote the letter published by us on the 2nd inst. He says: "The gross ignorance, respecting the Hawalian Islands, in the United States, is painful. We are no better known than the Fills, to the mass of the people. The good service that Mr. Wyllie did, in making us known to governments, should be supplemented, by writing us into the good graces of this

N. B .- It will be observed, that in the opinion, of Mr. G., if the freedmen are as well posted about this country as our neighbor says he thinks they are, they are much better informed than their countrymen of the other race. And, it will farther be observed that Mr. G. does not say anything about the good services that one may render to this People, by a persistent effort to write them into the had graces of that people.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Washington, January 5, 1869 Editor of the Havailan Gazette-Dear Sir:

I have returned from the South to spend the holidays in the Capital. Christmas, and Christmas trees, and Christmas festivities are ling to good music,) the General turned round well sustained in Washington. I think that and took a deliberate survey of persons in every Christian church denomination in this his immediate vicinity. Those drowsy blue the great Christian festival; for I observed that Unitarians and Methodists vied with etrating fire of his gaze, and discerned some Roman Catholics and Episcopalians in ever- thing of the latent power of a strong soul, green adornment of their places of worship, and I doubted not but that he had been The Unitarian church on D. Art is invoked. The Æsthetic nature is appealed to. You listen in rapt delight, in evangelical churches to the sweet sopranos, and tenors of the opera; and the stained wises windows impact a soft tinted high ecclesiastic halo, to the expherant worship of the disciples of Wesley. Soon the old mother will be outshone in finery, and more than rivalled in song by the sweet chaunts and tender intonings of her protesting, dissenting, and heroic offspring, who are looking back to the art in worship period of the mediaval centuries. In company with our Charge, I made round of calls on New Year's day. We called upon all the high officials, and a word of gossip about individuals much talked of and heard about may not be uninteresting to Island readers. After the White House parade, we first called at the mansion of Mr. Seward. I was astonished at the vigor and alertness of the Secretary. I remembered him twelve years ago as a rather feeble bodied and invalid Senator; but like Pope Sixtos, who threw away his crutches on coming into power, so he man of Auburn awakened to renewed vitality at the tinkle of the omnipotent little bell. The scar and lump on the jaw, made by that obtrusive visitor Payne, do not disfigure the face so much as has been represented. Seward is evidently bright and sound for another administration, if he is wanted : but I take it for granted that he wont be wanted. In his present courtesies, he was aided by an agreeable and very attractive young lady, his niece Miss Carpenter. Here I must digress with a word or two about ladies in general, as observed in society in this city, and also in New York. I wish to speak of the prevalence of beauty, as observed in the promenades, and in the saloons. Certainly, I observe wonderful improvement after an absence of eight years. Is it because my appreciation of these charms have been heightened by long years of isolation in the valley island; or is it a fact, the improvement in personal attractiveness as witnessed and noted by careful and unimpas- D. > But let us return to our young lady, who so graciously and gracefully receives in the drawing room of the great Secretary. She enquired "with lively interest" about Her Mulesty Queen Emma. And here I will remark that enquiries respecting Her Malesty, also His Majesty, and his interesting insular dominions, gave us an advantage among througs of callers, so that we got something more than the usual commouplace dose of with our fair hostess Miss Carpenter.

> We went from Secretary Seward's to the rest of the cabinet. Gen. Schofield is a handsome, rotund, gentleman, who was assisted by a most agreeable and gracious partner in dispensing hospitalities. The portly and rather cierical looking Secretary of the Treasury, the frail elegant looking Attorney General: the venerable Nestor of the navy: and the affable Minister of the Interior, assisted by their kind and lady-like partners, and many lovely attachees, sisters, cons and nieces, extended as cordial a hospitality, and as kindly a welcome, as though they dispensers of patronage and official courte-

At the bouse of Speaker Colfax, the Vice President elect, and also quite recently the bridegroom elect of a very handsome and intelligent lady, we found the crush and and throng of an ovation. The wise men from the East, and the West were thronging to worship the new star in white moir antique, and parure of pearls.

General Grant was not in town on New Year's day. He declined the olive branch of preconciliation tendered by President John. President elect, and also quite recently the reconciliation tendered by President Johnson, which was accepted by the bitter impeaching Butler. I think the most of the friends of General Grant, regret his absence from the capital on the great day of calls and reconciliations. I saw him the Sunday previous, at the Presbyterian Church, which is under the charge of Rev. Byron Sunderland. I attended this church and listened to his preaching in 1856, twelve years gone by: and it was curious and Mutte Chorus. years gone by; and it was curious and interesting to sit in the old pew, and observe the same little man rise up in the pulpit. Little change to note, except a little more grizzle of the beard. The same ideas, the same manner, and the same voice. But my attention and that of others, no doubt, was divided by another personage. I had barely seated myself, when a lady whispered to me: "it may not be uninteresting to you."

When the pews were gradually filled, and the preacher about to commence, a small plain man, accompanied by a lady, two boys, and a girl entered the vacant pew. The General was readily recognizable from the photographs previously observed. The first impres he produced, was that of a plain, farmer looking man, who was a little unwell, fa tigned and drowsy. It was the sleepy, inactive and unroused lion. All observers comment upon the drowsy expression of his countenance, when first seen, but there is a latent fire noted after further observation, of wonderful power. His well formed head is cropped closely and plainly. He did not give a close attention to the preacher, and when we stood up to listen to the choir, (an uncomfortable attitude by the way for listencity indulged in decoration to do honor to eyes sought each face with an enquiring look, and then I discerned and felt the pen-
